The Ripple You Never See

How One Presentation Came Full Circle Years Later

When our team speaks at schools and community events, the impact is not always immediate. There are no fireworks. No standing ovations. Sometimes, it feels like the words simply float out into the room and disappear. But they don't disappear. They take root.

Several years ago, Right to Life of Central California gave a presentation at a local school. Our team shared personal testimonies of choosing life—real stories of courage from women who faced unexpected pregnancies and chose to carry their children. Among the students in the audience that day was a young woman named Cara.

Cara heard the story of choosing life, and in that moment, she said she became pro-life. She didn't know then that her conviction would one day become her lifeline—or that a few years later, her resolve would be tested when she became unexpectedly pregnant herself.

Fast forward to this year. Our outreach team met Cara at a community event. She was facing an unexpected pregnancy, but she was confident in her desire to keep her baby. Knowing that resolve can waver when real pressure arrives, our team stayed in close communication with Cara through texts and calls and made plans to meet for lunch the following week.

At that lunch, Cara opened up: when she went home, her partner pressured her to get an abortion. The choice of keeping her baby—so certain just days before—suddenly felt impossible. But she told our team something that stopped us in our tracks: “Your messages kept me steady.”

Then came the full circle moment that none of us expected. Cara shared that her pro-life conviction was born years earlier—at that Right to Life presentation in her high school. The education she received that day gave her the resolve to say “no” to abortion. And when her own moment of crisis came, it was that foundation, built years ago by our supporters, that gave her the courage to choose life.

The education she received years ago gave her the resolve to say “no” to abortion. A seed planted in a school auditorium. A life saved years later. That is the power of generational giving.

Our team walked alongside Cara through the months that followed. And when she unexpectedly went into preterm labor and was hospitalized, Cara—who had been so certain she could handle things on her own—called us and finally said: “I don’t know what to do, and I don’t have anything ready.” We reassured her that we wanted to help and just needed that door to be open.

Our volunteers went through the literal door of Cara’s home and set up a fully equipped nursery—the crib, the room, and the community she needed to say “yes” to her baby. We sent photos to Cara in the hospital, and she was overwhelmed with relief. She could rest easier knowing her baby had a home ready and waiting.

Cara’s story is about the unseen work of everyone who has ever supported Right to Life of Central California. The donor who gave years ago so our team could speak at that school. The volunteer who showed up to assemble a nursery on short notice. The supporter who funds our outreach so we can be there when a young woman’s resolve is being tested at her kitchen table.

This baby is a product of a cycle that starts with you. You may never meet Cara. You may never see the life your gift touches. But make no mistake—your support is exactly what kept Cara steady when she was most vulnerable.
